The Malta Employers' Association has a new website – www.maltaemployers.com. The website is intended to make Maltese employers aware of the full scope of MEA's activities through constant updates of recent events. It also has a section on international issues which will inform employers about the association's international affiliations and the most relevant developments in the field of social policy and industrial relations. Another section includes a résumé of publications, studies and surveys conducted by the MEA.

MEA Director General Joseph Farrugia said that the website projects the image of a dynamic and focused organisation. 'During the past few years, the Association has been more proactive with employers through the services that it offers. This approach has been well received by employers, as is evident by the healthy upsurge in membership from all sectors of the economy. There has also been a tremendous positive response to the course in Employment Law that is organized at the MEA premises.' The web site is part of a strategy that will enable the Association to improve its communication with all Maltese employers and the general public, and that also reflects the Association's main raison d'être – to be the leading political and social lobbying force for all employers in matters relating to employment and social policy on the Maltese islands.
